The legacy of General Claire L. Chennault and his Flying Tigers fighter group is a bond between the peoples of China and the United States. This bond was forged during some of the darkest hours the world has ever known. Claire Chennault led the charge to go to China in 1937. By doing so, he not only helped save China but built an infrastructure for the war that was to come for the U.S.

The Chennault Foundation’s purpose is to continue to build on the relationship established by our fathers and forefathers, not only in China but with all of our veterans who have sacrificed so much to give us the opportunities that we have today. The Chennault Foundation’s mission is to advance cooperation and friendship by promoting active engagement in education, business and culture between the peoples of the United States and China.

The Chennault Foundation currently supports the Chennault Aviation & Military Museum in Monroe, Louisiana. General Chennault, a native of north Louisiana, made Monroe his last home. The museum houses over 11,000 artifacts representing all U.S. wars from World War I through the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. The museum building itself was part of the Selman Field Army Air Corps Base, the U.S.’s largest navigation school during WW II. Selman Field supplied over half the navigators sent to China and to Europe. The museum’s CEO is Nell Calloway, granddaughter of General Chennault.

The Chennault Foundation’s efforts are part of a larger vision- building the Chennault Flying Tiger Institute to ensure the establishment of a new course in our history. The Institute will be an international center, where ideas can be discussed and furthered through education and diplomacy.

In General Chennault’s own words, written in 1949:

“It is my fondest hope that the sign of the Flying Tiger will remain aloft just as long as it is needed and that it will always be remembered on both shores of the Pacific as the symbol of two great peoples working toward a common goal in war and peace.”

We are asking you to be a part of this greater vision. As the soldiers and airmen changed our history in World War II, let us build on that peace to change the futures for our next generations. By supporting the Chennault Foundation through your membership and sponsorship, you can help us make a difference in our world.

The Chennault Foundation is a 501(C) (3) non-profit corporation duly authorized to transact business. To learn more, call 318-362-5540 or visit chennaultmuseum.org.
